PORKY'S THANKSGIVING TURKEY

It was the week before Thanksgiving and Porky Pig stood by the fence, peering into Farmer Hogg's yard, where a hundred turkeys gobbled harshly and strutted proudly.

"Take your pick, sonny," Farmer Hogg said, waving one arm toward the turkeys. "You're smart to get your Thanksgiving bird early."

Porky looked and looked and finally he saw the one he wanted. It was the handsomest turkey Porky had ever seen. Its feathers were gleaming, golden bronze. It was big and plump and young. Its eyes were bright beads that looked straight at Porky.

"I'll t-take that one!" Porky decided, pointing. "I'll n-need a b-big one be-because I've in-invited the whole g-gang for Th-Thanksgiving d-dinner." The gang consisted of Petunia, Cicero, Bugs Bunny, Elmer Fudd, Beaky Buzzard, and Henery Hawk.

A few minutes later Porky trudged down the road toward home, leading his turkey on a thin rope behind him. He was busy in his back yard all the rest of the day, building a pen for it.

"N-Now you s-stay here an' eat all your f-food an' g-get b-big an' f-fat, T-Tom, old b-boy!" Porky said.

Tom, the turkey, gazed at Porky with bright-eyed affection.

"I w-wonder if he g-guesses w-we're g-goin' to eat him," Porky muttered as he walked away. And, suddenly, thinking of the handsome Tom's doom spoiled the thought of Thanksgiving dinner.

The next day he proudly showed the turkey to the eager Bugs and Petunia.

"Oh boy! Lookit our Thanksgiving dinner!" Bugs cried. "He's super!"

"He is a b-beauty, isn't h-he?" Porky asked proudly.

The turkey seemed to understand Porky's words. He preened his bronze feathers and strutted around.

"I th-think he knows m-me," Porky grinned. "I c-call him T-Tom, f-for fun!"

"He's almost too pretty to eat," Petunia sighed.

"Phooey!" Bugs scoffed. "He'll taste better'n he looks! I can hardly wait to sink my teeth into a drumstick, with mashed carrots on the side! Wait till the rest of the gang sees him!"

The next day the others came to gaze upon the handsome turkey and to talk hungrily of the big dinner.

The days passed swiftly. Porky spent a great deal of time in his back yard. He fed the turkey the finest of foods, including tidbits from his own plate.

"Hi, Tom!" Porky would call gaily as he hurried toward the pen. And Tom would prance over to the fence, nodding his head in greeting. Sometimes he thrust his head through the wire mesh to gaze at Porky. And Porky was sure that there was the gleam of a welcoming twinkle in his little bright eyes.

"I th-think he l-likes me," Porky confided to Petunia.

As the days slid past, Tom grew fatter and sleeker. And Porky grew sadder.

At last it was the day before Thanksgiving, the dreaded day when Tom was to meet his doom.

Sadly Porky carried Tom's breakfast out to the pen.

"H-Hi, T-Tom," he quavered, knowing that it was Tom's last meal.

"Gobble, gobble," Tom greeted him cheerfully. He ate his food with hungry speed, then looked up at Porky. In his eyes was the comradely understanding of a good friend.

The next day all the guests arrived early for the gala dinner.

"Boyohboy! Am I hungry!" Bugs exclaimed with a merry chuckle. "I haven't eaten a bite for two days, waitin' for that deelicious turkey!"

When they were all seated at the gaily decorated table, Porky came into the dining room, carrying a huge silver platter. On the platter, nestling in a bed of green parsley, was a giant, golden, fluffy omelet.

A chorus of surprised and disappointed voices filled the room.

"Hey! Where's the turkey?" Bugs exploded.

"Yeah!" five other voices echoed. "Where's the turkey?"

"I'm s-sorry. The t-turkey g-got loose an' r-ran away!" Porky stuttered, his round face flushing a bright pink.

There was so much noise in the dining room that no one, except Porky, heard the far-off sound of a turkey's gobbling behind the closed and locked doors of Porky's garage.
